1. The card class was the most useful selector because it let me style a content section with a border, padding, margin, and background color. I could apply the same design to multiple elements by giving them the class.
2. Margin creates space outside an element, while padding creates space between the element's content and its border. In my design, padding keeps text away from the edges, and margin separates sections.
3. The box model helped me control the spacing and size of the page's elements. Because I used `box-sizing: border-box`, an element's width includes its padding and border, which makes its size easier to manage.
4. Yes. I set the body text color to black (#222222) and gave paragraphs an auburn color (#914848). Paragraphs appear auburn because the color set directly on the elements takes precedence over the color inherited from the element.
5. The colors and spacing improve the appearance of my website. The light background, dark headings, and padding inside content sections make the page easier to read and more organized.
